Kauai's Young People "Papa Dragon's Tale"

"When I reached the cave, I put the emperor's daughter in the refrigerator, and stationed myself near the door of our house, in readiness to drive away any rascally man or men who might come to take my dinner."

"Oh, papa, did you kill her?" asked one of the younger children, smiling hungrily.

"Of course he didn't!" said Sammy, Jr., impatiently. "Why it would spoil her for eating! Haven't you learned that yet? Its very easy to see you haven't been to school!"

"There, don't be so superior, if you are in your second year," said Scalena Dragon to her son. "Let your father go on with his story."

"No; I like to keep them alive for a while," said the old dragon, "till they get cooled to the proper temperature. Meanwhile, as I said, I waited at the door of the cave. I knew that some of the emperor's people would come bothering me at first, and I wished to be ready for them. I expected a whole flock of them with bows and arrows and sharp sticks, but, to my surprise, only one came, and that after a long delay. About nightfall, and just as I was becoming hungry, I saw a man—a very large one, I thought him the largest I ever saw—come boldly to the door of the cave. He was armed only with one of those long pointed sticks that men seem to think are good for fighting dragons."

"Spears father," said Sammy, Jr. "I know, I know," said his father, sharply. "I have been a long time out of school, but I know a spear when I see one as well as you do—better, perhaps. Well, this very large man was incased in a thick sort of dress, and wore a queer head-covering."

"Was he a knight?" asked Mrs. Dragon.

"Not exactly, my love," her husband replied; "but he seemed quite as troublesome a creature. Well, of course, as soon as he was within fair clawing distance, I sprang toward him, and buried my claws in his body. To my surprise, he didn't seem to mind this at all. He made no outcry, did not attempt to use his weapon, but simply rose up into the air. This surprised me still more. I had never seen a man fly, and I did not know that they could fly. But nevertheless I held on, and made up my mind to fight him in the air, if he preferred that to a combat on the ground. Away we went, higher and higher, with increasing speed. As we sailed aloft, I devoted myself to tearing him to little bits. He really made no resistance, and allowed me to do whatever I chose. We shot upward and away so rapidly, however, that by the time I had succeeded in tearing off his thick quilted dress we must have been a long flight from the cave. When I had reached the man's own body, I drove one claw deeply into him, and discovered that—he was stuffed with straw."

All the little dragons were so much amused that they rattled their scales and whacked their tails against the rocks; and even Scalena Dragon was forced to spread her jaws in a wide, green smile of amusement.

"Yes, my dears," said father Dragon. "I was tearing a dummy to pieces, and my mouth was filled with burning straw. Of course I at once dropped the figure, and let myself descend to the ground."

Then I looked upward, and discovered that the dummy, which I had set on fire with my breath, was sailing away into the air, attached to a great machine made of paper stretched flat upon sticks, and carried along by the wind."

"Father, was it what the men call a kite?" asked Sammy, Jr., speaking more respectfully than before.

"I believe, so, my son. The emperor's people must have made the dummy, attached it to the machine, and then let it come up close to the door of the cave. Of course I made my way home as rapidly as I could, but I was too late. While I was chasing the dummy, the people had robbed my refrigerator, and I had to go supperless to bed. I was a little angry at first, but when I had thought it over, and had seen how cleverly I had been tricked, I could not help laughing at myself. I never told anybody about it before—not even your mother. I never mentioned it, Scalena."

"Never," said Mrs. Dragon. "It was certainly very ingenious. Those must have been exceedingly bright creatures, for men. They are not often so sagacious."

"No," said the Hon. Samuel P. Dragon. "Those were the cleverest little fellows I have ever seen. They are so wise that they even admire dragons. Did you know that they have a picture of one on their flag?"

"I didn't know it," said Mrs. Dragon. "Did you, Sammy?"

"I guess I may have known it," said Sammy, cautiously. "I think I remember something about it in one of my lessons at school."

"What became of the emperor's daughter?" asked one of the little dragons who seemed quite depressed because his father had lost his dinner.

"Don't let the story end with a disappointment, father," said Scalena Dragon, "because I'm afraid the children won't sleep well unless you can tell them that it turned out all right in the end."

"Dear child!" said the Hon. Samuel P. Dragon, taking his youngest on his knee, "you can go to sleep happily, love. Your father caught the emperor's daughter another time, and this time she didn't get away. I ate her—years and years ago. And very nice she was, too. It is almost sunrise, darling. The scorcher will soon be here. Run away, children, and sleep till the moon comes out again."

The dragon family slowly rose, and went yawning to bed; but before the last one was asleep, the sun was peeping over the hills, and far away could be heard faint cries of:

"Cock-a-doodle-doo o!"

Currie Makes Wise Example Of Law

(Special to the Garden Island)
HONOLULU, Nov. 9.—Owing to an overwhelming disposition to interrupt the Board of Health inspectors in the discharge of their duties, John Wise, has been arrested on instructions from Dr. Currie, and will probably be a little wiser by the time the department gets wise as to the extent of his opposition to decency.
